

ELM requirement proves to be tough for many students

By Marc Meredyth
Staff Writer

The Entrance Level Mathematics requirement in the California State University system is proving to be a difficulty for students and administrators alike at Cal Poly.

Mathematics professor Arthur DeKleine is in charge of keeping track of who needs to meet the ELM requirement. He said that for those who do not meet the math standards upon admission, the requirement must be met by passing the ELM test, offered once a quarter.

The problem, DeKleine said, is that it is difficult to keep track of all the students who need to take the ELM test. Furthermore, he said, the students themselves don't take the requirement seriously. They put off the test, thinking that the university would never disenroll them, DeKleine said.

The ELM is a CSU Trustee requirement that all students must meet upon entering a Cal State university. At Cal Poly, students who don't meet the requirement before they are admitted are given until their second year to demonstrate basic math proficiency.

Failure to meet the ELM requirement leads to academic disqualification.

A week after fall quarter began 1,600 letters were sent to all students who had not yet satisfied the requirement.

The result of these letters was that 650 students signed up to take the Oct. 19 examination. Four hundred sixty-seven students took the test. Two hundred twenty-five students are enrolled in remedial instruction to help them pass the test, and about 100 students have requested re-evaluation of their records.

DeKleine said this response is good, but there are still 800 students who need to take and pass the ELM test.

Biology moose is recovered

By Debbe Boxx

Staff Writer

After a long chase, the Alaskan Moose head stolen from the biology department museum was recovered Saturday.

Investigator Wayne Carmack said a member of a sorority reported the $600 moose head taken Oct. 15 was found at the doorstep of their house. She told Carmack she had already given the moose head to her brother who moved it to his fraternity house for a day. A person visiting the house said he remembered McClintocks had a moose head stolen some time ago and took it there.

A representative for McClintocks said the moose head did not belong to the restaurant and suggested they donate it to a Moose Lodge. The man at McClintocks contacted a friend at the Atascadero Moose Lodge and was told the new Santa Margarita Moose Lodge needed a moose head.

Carmack intercepted the moose head because he also knew the lodge person in Atascadero. Carmack made an appointment to pick up the moose head. "The moose head really got around," said Carmack.

Agnew is concerned about city's economy

By Susan Harris
Staff Writer

A self-labeled moderate, City Council candidate Paul Agnew said he would strike a "strict balance between San Luis Obispo's historical and environmental sides and a commercial base."

"I believe we can have controlled growth and maintain an expanded commercial base," said Agnew.

To help achieve this goal, he said he would like to see a high-tech, clean industry come to San Luis Obispo to maintain economic stability and provide more jobs.

Worried about the economy of the city, Agnew quoted the Telegram-Tribune as saying retail sales stayed the same during the last year, while the population had increased.

"We're losing much of our tourism to coastal communities," he said.

Agnew said the city should create a final tourist destination to ensure a sound economy without adversely affecting the environment like other industries might.

According to Agnew, the Madonna Inn used to draw many tourists to San Luis Obispo.

"San Luis Obispo needs to concentrate on tourism for its primary industry," he said.

Agnew said the city is losing many retail sales to Santa Maria.

"It's not a crisis yet, but we must keep our eye on the future," he said.

Building development in the community, Agnew said, has too many arbitrary decisions within the review systems.

Reiterating the views of many candidates, Agnew said he would reduce the cost of housing by shortening the review process.

"I don't want to abolish the safety measures though," he said.

Agnew said he would also like to see the City Council play a bigger part in the process. "They gave away most of their power to advisory boards."

Also slowing city growth is the limited water supply, he said.

"The city is using water as a tool to limit growth."

Agnew wants to set up a commission of students and year-round citizens to meet monthly or bimonthly to discuss city-campus problems. The noise ordinance and alcohol ban problems could have been avoided by such meetings, he said.

"The city's intentions may have been good, but the results were out of line," he said.

"In the past students have been apathetic, but they are a major force when they vote," Agnew said. "They seem to agree with the alternate ideas being circulated."

"I'm concerned with doing the job but not overly concerned with being colorful," said Agnew.

Reagan and his deficit

Here we go again!

The figures are in and they continue to tell the same story: the federal deficit grew to astronomical heights again last year.

The U.S. government reported that it operated $211.9 billion in the red for the 1985 fiscal year ending Sept. 30, making it the largest deficit ever.

This pushes the total federal deficit to almost $2 trillion, $733 billion more than before President Ronald Reagan took office.

This marks a 15 percent increase over the previous year's budget deficit and also indicates a 16.3 percent increase in the debt service paid out by the Treasury. Debt service is the interest paid out to holders of savings bonds, Treasury Bills and other securities, to the tune of $178.9 billion in 1985.

All of this comes from a man who ran his first campaign promising a balanced budget. He is also the same man who is calling for legislative action that would require a balanced budget within six years.

It seems ironic that President Reagan is now spearheading a drive on Capitol Hill to require a balanced budget within six years, a plan that would not even go into effect until he is long removed from office. It is also ironic that this is the same politician who pushed through a revenue reducing tax cut in 1981.

It is amazing that this man has the gall to call for a balanced budget after all he has done to almost double the national debt.

One question that we can only wait to have answered is: How will history treat the 40th President of the United States of America? Will he be seen as the quick fix whose ego left this nation severely weakened financially? We can only wait and see.

Unwritten rules can cause confusion

"You can't play the game if you don't know the rules." This is as true of government as it is of any organized activity. Most games have standard, written rules. Can you build houses on Park Place if Boardwalk is mortgaged? Look it up in the rules. Governments have written rules in the form of constitutions, codes and bylaws. But governments are also ruled by tradition, precedent, and "standard procedure." Because these types of rules are often unwritten, they are difficult for outsiders to learn. In two recent instances, these unwritten rules have created tension between members of student government and city government. A key player in both instances was Cal Poly professor and city councilman Allen Settle.

Student leaders became concerned this summer when they realized a proposed restriction on alcohol in city parks, originally intended to deal with transient problems in Mitchell Park, was being extended to areas that would affect students. Although an alternate proposal was developed, it was not presented until after the original proposal had received its first reading. In a recent interview, Councilman Settle explained that while the proposal could have been changed after its first reading, doing so would have delayed it into next year. He told me that while he would support lifting the restriction from any areas where it later proves unjustified, he felt compelled to vote "on the side of caution." Citing a need to respond to a community concern, and noting three hundred signatures in support of the measure (although one thousand have since been gathered against it), Settle cast the deciding vote in favor of the restriction.

The main objection to the students' alternate proposal seemed to be procedural. Understanding the written rules but not the unwritten ones, our student leaders committed the sin of bad timing. They came after the proposal's first reading. But at a recent ASI Senate meeting, it was Settle, and not the students, who did not understand the rules.

Open forum is a time set aside when anyone can address the ASI Senate on any issue. At one particular meeting this month, Settle and Paul Lewis, both candidates for city council, addressed the Senate during open forum. Neither spoke as a candidate, however. When a third candidate, Paul Agnew, arrived and delivered a campaign speech, Settle accused the Senate of showing favoritism and not playing by the rules. Actually it was Settle who did not understand the rules.

These two instances seem to have damaged Settle's credibility. See POINT, page 3

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Bowling alley remains an issue of concern

Editor — This is in response to Shelby West's letter regarding how unhappy she was with the bowling alley story which appeared in Mustang Daily on Friday, Oct. 21. In her letter, Ms. West defends the actions of the University Union Advisory Board regarding their decision on the removal of the bowling alley. While I agree with her that the UUAB provides a useful service, I disagree with her statement that a student vote on the bowling issue is not necessary. The following are several reasons why I feel this was made.

First, when the UUAB made its decision last spring to recommend to President Baker that the lanes be removed, it made that decision based on inaccurate and now out-of-date financial figures. For example, last spring it was presented to the UUAB that it would cost $150,000 to upgrade the lanes to working conditions. This summer a report submitted by a consultant showed only $13,000 is needed to upgrade the lanes. In light of this fact, Union management has decided that the bowling alley issue is no longer one concerning finances but one concerning use.

Second, approximately 1,600 students signed a petition last spring to save the bowling lanes; a much stronger support for them than has been demonstrated against them.

Third, she states that the UUAB is comprised of a student majority. While this is in fact true, I still question whether or not some of those students were completely unbiased in their decisions. I mean, when I hear the vice chairman of the UUAB before casting her vote last spring say, "I don't bowl ... my roommates don't bowl, therefore I vote to remove them," I find it hard to believe that an unbiased decision was made.

And finally, Ms. West stated she was both surprised and disappointed that only one board member was contacted as a source for the article. I would like to point out that I was equally as surprised and disappointed last spring when only one board member out of 15 came down personally to investigate the condition of the lanes and to talk with games area manager Bob Jenkins before making a decision!

And so Ms. West, this is why I still and always have felt that it should be left to the student body to decide the fate of the bowling lanes. After all, we are talking about removing a revenue generating area and replacing it with a service oriented and student funded area.

Correction

In the Tuesday edition of Mustang Daily part of a story concerning City Council candidate Allen Settle was omitted. The last sentence of the last paragraph should have read: "The resolution also asks the council to make an effort when dealing with student input."

Sakharov's wife may be released

MOSCOW (AP) — Yelena Bonner, wife of Nobel Peace Prize laureate Andrei D. Sakharov, will be released from exile in the Soviet Union and allowed to go to the West for medical treatment, a Soviet journalist said Tuesday.

If the report is true, it could signal a reversal of Kremlin policy toward Sakharov, the country's best known dissident, and his wife.

The West German newspaper Bild reported Monday that Bonner, 60, would be allowed to leave the Soviet Union immediately. Soviet journalist Victor Louis, who has close ties with Soviet officials, said he believed the report was authentic and that the United States was her likely destination.

Thousands flee Hurricane Juan

LAKE CHARLES, La. (AP) — Hurricane Juan, already blamed for three deaths and the disappearance of four people, churned the waters off Texas and Louisiana Tuesday with 85 mph wind after ripping loose oil rigs, capsizing crew boats and dumping dozens of people into the stormy seas.

The surprising late-season storm drifted east Tuesday and forecasters said that since a large part of it was still over water, any weakening would be slow.

Thousands of people have fled their homes as Juan has battered the Gulf Coast, hundreds more remain cut off from their homes and the Coast Guard said nearly 150 people were plucked from the rough Gulf of Mexico by late Monday with helicopters and a fleet of private and military vessels.

PALS editorial hits the spot for volunteers

Editor — Student Community Services would like to thank you for your Oct. 18 editorial describing the need for volunteers for the PALS program. Since its publication, over a dozen people have come by the SCS office asking about PALS. Such response is not only a tribute to the impact of your editorial, but also real proof that Cal Poly students care about their community.

Along with the PALS program, Student Community Services sponsors several projects which have a continuous need for volunteers. Outreach helps the developmentally disabled become part of the community through activities such as barbecues, outings and Special Olympics. Senior Services reaches out to the San Luis Obispo senior community with an Adopt-a-Grandparent program. The Tutorial Project helps children from kindergarten to high school who need extra help with their school work.

SCS also has short-term projects for Greeks, clubs, residence halls and other groups which would like to help out in the community. Students interested in any of these programs can get more information by stopping by the Activities Planning Center.

The San Luis Obispo area has a never-ending need for people who are willing to volunteer their time and effort to help others. We greatly appreciate the support of Mustang Daily and all our student volunteers for this much-needed service.

Student thinks UUAB is afraid of new survey

Editor — In her letter on the bowling lanes (Mustang Daily, Oct. 22) Shelby West states, "If every issue that affected the student union was brought before the students for a vote, it would be impossible for the board to function effectively." I think she is afraid that a survey would show the students want to keep the bowling alley. The survey done by a marketing student for Roger Conway showed that students preferred the bowling alley over weight-lifting and aerobics even though the wording was strongly biased against bowling.

Destruction of a $250,000 investment and spending $200,000 on facilities which the physical education department is supposed to supply and which are already available on campus should not be taken lightly.

Erosion conscious students thank Daily

Editor — The Soils and Soil Conservation Society of America clubs would like to thank the editors of the Mustang Daily for the generous comments about our reseeded project on the hills above Cal Poly.

Soil erosion exists as a major problem throughout the nation and around Cal Poly. If each year only just a tiny amount of soil eroded it is lost to our future generations forever. The greatest danger about soil erosion is that by the time you notice it, it is too late.

Both clubs would like to make Cal Poly students aware of the dangers of erosion.

with the ASI. Although the councilman (who styles himself as "sensitive" to student concerns) speaks of expanding downtown events on Thursday nights and improving city-fraternity relations, he has been characterized by some student leaders as "anti-student." One noted that "Settle's sensitivity toward students hasn't been expressed in his voting."

ASI Community Affairs Officer Mark Reichel was much more blunt. "Settle has an utter disregard for the concerns and rights of the campus community," said Reichel. Settle responded that he was not anti-student, but "pro-community, which includes the student body." He claimed that, unlike some, he was not "pro-student" on campus and then "anti-student" off campus. He also warned against candidates who make difficult or impossible promises.

"Is Settle anti-student, or have the rules just gotten in the way? Students will have to decide that for themselves. And that's one of the good rules about our governments: we get to choose the players.

Changes in store for ag program

By Jan Sprague
Staff Writer

The Cal Poly International Agriculture Development Program will be undergoing changes in an attempt to improve the curriculum, attract more students and solicit work contracts for more funding, said the associate dean of the School of Agriculture.

Larry Rathbun said the program is set up to accommodate several purposes. It sponsors students from foreign countries who study at Cal Poly, then return to their homeland. Such students receive funding from the Agency for International Development, A.I.D.

Rathbun said the International Agriculture Program has been running on a shoestring budget, and more funding is needed to improve the program.

"The money to run the program comes from Sacramento, from taxpayer's pockets, and they'd like to keep the money here in California," he said. "Politicians think if students are trained with California money, then they should be working on California projects."

The program solicits working contracts from private and government companies for overseas projects. Currently, Cal Poly is working on an agriculture project in Lesotho, South Africa; Indonesia, where Bechtel is sponsoring the construction of six community colleges, and Costa Rica where the Kellogg foundation is sponsoring the construction of an agriculture college.

"We provide trained graduates and faculty for these projects, to train staff and to assist in the building," said Rathbun.

The International Food and Agriculture Committee is also part of the department. Twenty-one faculty members representing a variety of schools on campus help in evaluating possible projects, said Rathbun.

"It's our intention to get more funding to run all these programs," he said. "We're trying to get funding from USAID, the World Bank, foreign governments, and private companies that have evolved as sources from the past. The most stable money comes from the U.S. government."

The program has problems getting support because of a belief that it doesn't do any good to develop the economy of a foreign country if they aren't in a position to trade with the United States, said Rathbun. At the same time, developing countries need help to start trading.

"You want to help developing countries improve their lot in life," said Rathbun, "and you start on a humanitarian basis and fall into that old adage of giving them a fish each day instead of teaching them to fish."

Rathbun said the International Agriculture Development program is headed in the right direction. "We're more interested in finding the funds for projects that erect teaching facilities. Losothos is an interesting project because of an intense effort to resolve their food crisis. Our part of the project will be building a school and assisting in teaching," he said.

"As part of our local training, we have to recognize that our students live outside of California's boundaries. I hope students here rub elbows with people from around the world; it helps broaden your perspective. The kind of thing Cal Poly does is what the international scene needs; the applied, hands-on learn-by-doing approach."

Police search for clues in Impressionist art theft

PARIS (AP) — Culture Minister Jack Lang said Monday that France would not yield to any extortion demand to recover nine impressionist paintings worth $12.5 million that were stolen by gunmen from a Paris museum.

Police combed the Marmottan Museum and took testimony from guards and visitors who were forced to lie on the floor Sunday while at least five "connoisseur" thieves stole nine works of art, including Claude Monet's priceless "Impression Soleil Levant."

The work, "Impression Sunrise," inspired the name for the 19th century impressionist movement.

The Academie des Beaux Arts, which oversees the Marmottan Museum, said none of the nine paintings, including five Monets and two Renoirs, was insured. No paintings in French museums are insured until they are loaned out to other museums, the Academie said.

Jean-Claude Vincent, head of the special police unit charged with stolen art objects, said most museum thefts were aimed at reselling the stolen work or getting insurance money through extortion.

"There will be no question of acceding to any sort of extortion," said Lang. "I know the French police are active and remarkably organized to do the impossible to find the (culprits) and, above all, the artwork."

The stolen paintings were valued at the equivalent of $12.5 million by museum curator Yves Brayer. But he said the Monet picture was priceless because of its historic value.

The bandits put the paintings into the trunk of a gray car double-parked outside the museum and drove away.

Student entrepreneurs

Thursday night in San Luis Obispo — a night to walk down Higuera Street, buy fresh fruits and vegetables, eat ribs and shop. It's also a night to work for some Cal Poly students.

Gaining sales experience, supplementing school costs and even getting college credit are reasons students participate in Farmers Market.

Doug Ulrich, a junior agricultural engineering student, sells almonds. His family owns a almond farm in Modesto.

"The almond price isn't very good this year. My father and I were talking about other ways to sell the almonds. I decided to try this. I brought 500 pounds of almonds from home to sell," said Ulrich.

"Farmers Market keeps me busy and helps out with the money," said Ulrich. "I put in about two hours before Thursday night sorting through the almonds. It doesn't seem like work. It's a lot of fun," said Ulrich who also puts in 15 hours a week working at a metal fabrication shop. "Well, sometimes it's a pain, but the money makes up for it."

Vito Chiesa, a junior fruit science major is from Hughson which is near Modesto. His family also owns an almond farm. Chiesa sells almonds and dried fruits.

"I put in about eight hours a week preparing for Farmers Market. My mom does the packaging and grading. The key to selling is to make enough money to keep me from getting a job," said Chiesa. "I don't have 15 hours a week free to work."

Gar Bailey, a senior architecture engineer, is a partner in a plant nursery. He wanted to become involved in business, so he and a partner bought a nursery in Nipomo. "I just knew the basic stuff you can read in books about plants and taking care of my own," said Bailey.

nursery. On Thursday I put in 10 hours. I get out of school at 2 p.m. and work on this until I'm done. Sometimes I have to go right back to school when Farmers Market is finished," Bailey said.

"I get behind on school work, but it's just like any other job where you give up study time or turn something in late," explained Bailey. "I pick my own hours, and I can do what I want."

Cindy Kelly, a senior business major said she works three jobs a week but the money she makes at Farmers Market is her spending money for the week.

Kelly helps sell produce for an Arroyo Grande farmer. "I started out helping my roommate and her mother, but Doug (the farmer) needed help, so I'm helping him out," said Kelly.

Some Cal Poly students receive three elective units through the Agricultural Enterprise Program for selling their produce. The program, sponsored in part by the state and in part by the Cal Poly Foundation, enables students to become involved in all stages of farming, from planting and harvesting to selling their produce at Farmers Market. The purpose of the program is to let the students see what the farmers go through from beginning to end. One third of the money earned from selling produce grown as part of the projects goes to the state, another third goes back to the university and the students keep what is left.

Jeff Saikhof, a senior crop science major sells butternut squash for his enterprise project. "I'm not doing it for the cash. I'm doing it for the experience," said Saikhof. "It's also a lot easier than calling people up and going to stores trying to sell the squash. Cal Poly pays for the seeds, the water and the students provide the labor. We don't endure any cost," said Saikhof.

Gar Bailey unloads his plants, a potential customer looks at Vito Chiesa's almonds. Doug Ulrich weighs his almonds.

Steve Macedo, a dairy science major, sells freshly picked garlic. "The main goal is to learn, but it's nice to make money for the time put into the project."

Farmers Market manager John Turner said five to six Cal Poly students sell at Farmers Market on an average Thursday night. Although there are five markets in San Luis Obispo County, Turner said most students sell at the Higuera Street market.

"I've done a few other farmers markets, but this is the best," said Bailey. "It's fun to people watch. There are some strange people and people just doing their own thing."

Investigators neglected warning of fake doctor

SAN JOSE (AP) — State investigators said Tuesday they were warned five weeks before the death of a wealthy 84-year-old woman that her live-in heart doctor was a fake, but were too busy to check the report.

Ebrahim Sadeghy, 38, appeared in court Tuesday to enter a plea to charges that he caused the death of Myrtle Reid of Campbell in a plot to get her fortune. Sadeghy, charged with murder, fraud, perjury and posing as a doctor, was granted a delay on entering a plea until Nov. 12.

Sadeghy, an Iranian who had a phony medical certificate, was hired as a live-in aide for Reid a year ago when her husband was dying of Alzheimer's disease. After her husband's death in December, Reid adopted Sadeghy and left him a estate that included two homes.

On May 6, five weeks before Reid's death, a written complaint from a neighbor about Sadeghy was received by the San Mateo office of the state Board of Medical Quality Assurance, according to chief investigator Vernon Leeper in Sacramento.

The complaint was referred to investigators on May 13, but it was not until May 22 that the case was assigned to an agent.

Gay servicemen face discharge

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon, despite earlier assurances to the contrary, says servicemen who acknowledge drug use or homosexual activity during screening for exposure to the disease AIDS can face discharge proceedings.

The voluntary disclosure of such incriminating information cannot be used for courts-martial or to justify a less than honorable discharge, but it can be used as grounds to dismiss individuals "for the convenience of the government" with an honorable discharge, Pentagon attorneys said Monday.

That explanation marks a significant reversal of what reporters were told last Friday by a Pentagon spokesman when he announced Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger had signed a new directive on AIDS testing.

The spokesman, Lt. Col. Pete Wyro, acknowledged Monday the information he had distributed on the new policy was in error. Wyro had said that individuals who volunteered information about drug use or homosexuality could not be discharged on the basis of such an admission.

Drug abuse and homosexuality are normal grounds for discharge from the armed services. AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, has been most prevalent among homosexuals and intravenous drug abusers. The disease, for which no cure has been found, destroys the body's immune system against infections. AIDS has victimized more than 14,000 people; more than half have died.

Available blood tests, such as that being used by the Pentagon, cannot confirm whether a person will get AIDS, but only the presence of an antibody that indicates the person has been exposed to the virus.

The change in the Pentagon's interpretation of the new policy is sure to arouse the ire of groups representing homosexuals, who have charged for months that the Defense Department wants to use the new AIDS blood test as a means of searching for gay servicemen.

The new statement of policy is also likely to trouble military medical officials, who had hoped the Pentagon would agree to keep doctor-patient conversations confidential as a means of encouraging full disclosures that could help in tracking any spread of the disease.

Soviet offer draws skeptical response

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union has offered to halt construction of a suspicious Siberian radar and to accept small-scale tests of the controversial U.S. "Star Wars" program, Reagan administration officials said Tuesday. But the offer to halt work at the Krasnoyarsk site, which President Reagan branded as illegal in a report to Congress, is drawing a skeptical response because it would depend on the United States not going ahead with the modernization of early-warning radar in Greenland and Britain.

"They have made us an offer we can refuse," an official said, stressing the importance of upgrading the Thule and Fylingdales radars in alerting the United States to a nuclear attack.

The Soviet gesture on Star Wars, however, is considered a positive move in dealing with the main impediment to progress on a new nuclear arms control treaty. Reagan's $26 billion program to develop a high-technology anti-missile shield has slowed arms negotiations in Geneva, Switzerland.

Both proposals, through diplomatic channels in Geneva, appear to be part of a concerted public relations campaign by the Soviets in advance of Reagan's Nov. 19-20 summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The Soviets are resisting cuts in offensive nuclear weapons unless curbs are also applied to the Strategic Defense Initiative.

Wayward whale

Humphrey still at large

RIO VISTA, Calif. (AP) — As rescue money ran low and frustration ran high, Humphrey the wayward whale flapped and splashed in inland waters Tuesday, eluding rescuers trying to attach a space-age transmitter.

On the animal's 16th day away from his salty deep-sea home, beleaguered marine scientists gave the beast a rest from the pipe-banging, whale-chasing flotillas launched repeatedly to coax the 40-foot mammal back to the Pacific.

again, to tag the 45-ton humpback with a transmitter that would let them keep tabs on his whereabouts, but they failed, as they had in an earlier effort.

"It was a little too windy for that, so they disbanded for the day," said Coast Guard Boatsmate Randy Keviny.

Soviet sailor has support of former Soviet prisoner

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Lithuanian defector Simas Kudirka, once imprisoned in Russia for trying to jump ship in the United States, says it would be more humane to poison a Soviet sailor than to send him home.

Kudirka, focus of a tense international incident in 1970 and topic of a 1978 television movie starring Alan Arkin called "The Defection of Simas Kudirka," said Monday that the United States should do all it can to prevent Ukrainian sailor Miroslav Medvid from being taken home from Belle Chasse, La., against his will.

"The prison in the Soviet empire is like the Nazi concentration camp," Kudirka said. "The only difference is there is no crematorium. Instead, it is a refrigerator where you starve to death while you freeze.

"If you can't give asylum to a refugee, it is better that you give him poison so he can die quickly," he said.

Medvid, who was twice forced back to his ship after apparent defection attempts, was taken ashore Monday night after showing signs of illness, State Department officials said. Soviet representatives, who were with him on the cutter, were allowed to accompany him onshore.

Kudirka tried to defect in 1970 by jumping onto a Coast Guard vessel off Martha's Vineyard, but the American skipper allowed Soviet sailors to drag him back to his ship.

Committee to form CSU immunization policy

By Carol A. Maltman
Staff Writer

An advisory committee has been formed by the Chancellor to develop a policy to make measles and rubella immunizations mandatory at California State Universities, said James H. Nash, director of the Health Center.

"Immunizations will probably become mandatory by next fall quarter," said Nash. "Everybody enrolled at Cal Poly will be required to be immunized or have proof of immunization such as a signed letter of vaccination or a lab blood test showing their immunity."

The policy of mandatory immunization has come about due to the work of the California Department of Health Services, the American College Health Association and the Center for Disease Control, said Nash.

"Fifteen to 20 percent of college students are susceptible to the diseases due to inadequate immunization," said Nash. "Last spring we had 10 to 15 cases of the measles. We usually have a case going on almost all the time," Nash said.

Measles is a common childhood disease which is more serious in young adults. Its symptoms are a rash, high fever, cough, runny nose and watery eyes which usually last one to two weeks. It does have a small death rate and can lead to other problems such as ear infection or pneumonia.

At least 300 cases of the measles have been reported by colleges and universities in the United States this year. Principia College in Illinois has had 128 confirmed cases and three deaths. It is a Christian Science college and most students who attend do not believe in vaccinations.

At least 300 cases of measles have been reported by colleges.

Rubella is also called the German Measles. It is usually very mild and causes a rash, slight fever and swelling of the glands in the neck. The sickness usually lasts about three days. The major significance of rubella is that if a pregnant woman gets the disease, there is a good chance that she may have a miscarriage or that the baby will be born blind, crippled or stillborn.

"If a woman gets rubella early in pregnancy she is usually advised to have a therapeutic abortion. There is no test to find out if the baby is okay. We have to wait until the baby is born," said Nash.

"Three years ago we had 30 to 40 cases of rubella. Ten pregnant women who worked on campus went home for a month. It cost them and the university a lot of money, and it was totally unnecessary. Had the women been immunized they would not have had to go home," Nash said.

There are no statutory code requirements for immunization of students attending community colleges or universities in California. However, children from kindergarten through twelfth grade have 10 days from admission into school to provide proof of the required immunizations.

"I have mixed feelings about the requirement, but it is basically a good idea," said Nash. "I hate to make anything compulsory. We don't want to be the campus health policeman. The Chancellor agreed that the immunizations should be mandatory, but the health centers were not equipped to handle it."

The advisory committee has been set up to identify the components of a successful mandatory immunization program for the CSU campuses.

"Studies show that voluntary immunization programs do not work. At the Health Fair held in the University Union Plaza last month we gave five measles immunizations, we had enough for 100 shots," said Nash.

Foreign professors to learn teaching techniques

By Karen Kraemer
Staff Writer

Exchanges have become an invaluable bridge for humanistic and scientific learning. — The Annals of American Academy.

Two foreign professors have bridged the oceans to learn about American methods of teaching architecture.

Yang Bao Sheng, from the People's Republic of China, and Nezih Ayiran, from Istanbul, Turkey, share an office near the Graphic Arts Building. The sparsely decorated room has yet to be touched by both men's personalities. Two opposites sharing the same experience, the visiting scholars spent their first months in the United States becoming acquainted with a new culture.

It is the first time Yang or Ayiran have visited the United States. Though still gaining a grip on a new language, both are adjusting easily.

Gar Day Ding, dean of the School of Architecture and Environmental Design, said the visiting professors are an example of an exchange that has been a long tradition at Cal Poly.

"We are very pleased to have this sort of exchange," said Ding. "The whole thing is wide open. As of yet they have no teaching responsibilities and may spend their time doing what they feel is appropriate for their research."

Yang, an associate professor at the Institute of Technology in Guangzhou, South China, has been waiting for the chance to come to the United States for many years. Though separated for a year from his wife and daughter, Yang believes the experience was one not to be missed.

'I would like to go deep into the reality of the architectural teaching ...' — Yang Bao Sheng

"All is new to me," said Yang. "Although I am here only a few weeks, people here have treated me with a warmth of spirit. I am always met with a smile."

Ten years ago such an exchange would never have been possible, said Yang. During the period of China's cultural revolution from 1966-1976, the Chinese saw a complete halt to all educational, industrial and technological advancements.

"The whole country was influenced by the cultural revolution," said Yang. "Everything almost came to a stop."

In 1978, Yang said China finally "opened her doors," allowing opportunities such as the one that was granted to Yang.

The coming year is a chance for Yang to not only observe the American methods of architectural teaching, but a chance to spend time on research.

As an early observer in a few Cal Poly classes, Yang has found that though the foundations of teaching are similar in both countries, the methods are different.

"I would like to go deep into the realities of the architectural teaching processes," said Yang.

Speaking slowly in the new language, Yang described his hopes for an eventual chance to lecture at Cal Poly.

"But only when my English gets better," said Yang.

Across the room surrounded by volumes of books, Yang's office mate, Nezih Ayiran described his opportunity to come to America.

Ayiran, an assistant professor in architecture design at the Technical University of Istanbul, arrived in San Luis Obispo in August. Like Yang, Ayiran has waited for some time for the chance to become involved in such an educational exchange.

SHIRLEY THOMPSON/Mustang Daily

Professors Nezih Ayiran and Yang Bao Sheng

"Each year the list is longer and finally you are at the top," said Ayiran.

By observing the classes of Don Grant, architecture professor, Ayiran hopes to observe Grant's teaching methods and "if possible eventually join in."

Ayiran finds his early observation of the Cal Poly architecture courses to be interesting.

"The professors here are lucky because they have not more than 20 students in their course. We have as many as 70 or 80. It's much harder to have a good relationship with so many in the class," said Ayiran.

Ayiran chose California as grounds for study because of the newness of the architecture in comparison to that of the eastern states and especially to the historical methods of Turkish architecture.

"It is much easier to find different expressions of architecture in California because it seems to be always changing," said Ayiran.

Men's water polo goes under in two

By Joe Packard
Special to the Daily

Halloween came a few days early for the men's water polo team, as the Mustangs were shocked out of their bathing costumes with the competition of two Division I teams.

Coach Paul Cutino realizes the distance which exists between his program and those of Division I schools, but he wasn't anticipating such a big jump. Cal Poly dropped decisions of 15-2 to Cal State Fullerton and 13-6 to the University of Santa Clara over the weekend.

"Our intensity wasn't there, and we didn't cover them very well — is about the best way to put it," said Cutino, concerning the Fullerton match.

The Mustangs played particularly loose on Titan poloist J.B. Feaster, who fostered four goals in the first quarter. Feaster was shut out the rest of the game, but John Quillman of Fullerton scored four more.

Bob Weaver and Bob Frappia scored two in the first half for Poly's only goals of the match. Mustang goalie Chip Clark had nine saves and blocked a Titan six-on-five play.

On Saturday, the Mustangs ran into a fired up Santa Clara squad, which changed its game plans since the close match against the Mustangs in the Cal Poly Invitational a week ago. Cutino said the Broncos played their best game of the season Saturday and Poly couldn't keep up with them.

"We again lacked the necessary concentration and generally did not play well as a team," said Cutino.

The Broncos made four fast break goals, and the Mustangs could not convert on three penalty shots. Some bright spots in Poly's effort came as the Mustangs scored five of their six goals in the second half, showing the spark of the true green and gold team.

Co-captain Dan Penico played his best game of the season for the Mustangs and had two goals, said Cutino. Bob Frappia, Angelo Guinasso and Erik Kauli also contributed to the Mustangs six goals, and goalie Clark had seven saves. Santa Clara's big guns were Thomas Navarro and Brian Crane, who had three goals each.

This weekend the Mustang water polo team travels down south for four big matches against Cal Tech, Claremont College, Redlands University and UC Riverside.

New assistant coach named

Steve Beason is definitely not in Kansas anymore

By Joe Packard
Special to the Daily

The Cal Poly men's basketball team started practice last week, with the addition of a new assistant coach joining the green and gold, rush of Head Coach Ernie Wheeler's program.

Steve Beason, hired last month, will succeed Greg Marshall as the new assistant basketball coach for the Mustangs. Marshall resigned to assume a similar position at Westmont College in Santa Barbara.

"The central coast was my number one choice for a place to live, and I finally made it," said Beason.

The personable Beason brings to Poly a coaching philosophy similar to the type Mustang Coach Wheeler has brought to distinction — pressure defense, a deliberate offense, reliance on fundamentals and getting every ounce of mental and physical potential out of each player. The contrasting style is to "run and gun" and hope that a team's sheer talent and speed will enable it to come out on top, said Beason.

Growing up in Whittier, Beason played his high school and junior college basketball in his hometown, and then transferred to Emporia State University in Kansas. Emporia State gave Beason more basketball experience and allowed him to graduate with a Bachelor's Degree in Physical Education in 1979.

SHIRLEY THOMPSON/Mustang Daily

Steve Beason is the new assistant coach for the men's basketball team.

Beason became an undergraduate basketball assistant at Emporia State, after completing his playing eligibility, and also coached at Emporia High School. In 1981, Beason landed his first head coaching job at Quivara High School in "hoop crazy" Bushton, Kansas, where he had his most rewarding moment in coaching by leading his team through a victorious season of 22-2 in 1983.

"We faced Lucas High (Kansas) in the last regular season game. They were ranked number four in the state, and had beaten us by one for our only loss that season," said Beason. "We came out smoking and were up 29-2 at one point — it was so nice to see everything come together for us."

The Quivara High School team finished third in the state tournament, and Beason was named Class A Coach of the Year in 1983 to cap an outstanding stay in the Sunflower State.

Most recently, Beason's head coaching job at Whittier High School let him rebuild the basketball program by leading his 1985 team to a 16-6 record and brought about Whittier's first playoff appearance in seven years. Beason received the Whitmont league Coach of the Year award for his excellent work in the 1985 season.

Beason, 29, also earned his Master's in social science from Emporia State, and will take on a teaching position at Cal Poly in addition to assisting Coach Wheeler on the basketball courts. The Mustangs seek to return to usual form after posting an average overall record of 21-8 over the past six seasons, and as history has indicated, Beason's presence won't hurt the pursuit of Cal Poly's goal.

these other 800 students a two-part list was sent out to each department.

On the first part of the list are those students who need to pass the test by spring quarter 1986. Wilson said no official action has been authorized if the students don't pass the exam by spring, but he said about 200 students had their CAR materials placed on hold for this fall quarter because they didn't meet the requirements last year.

On the second part of the list are those students who must take the test by spring quarter. DeKleine said these students should take the test by then so if they fail there will still be time to retake the test.

Wilson stressed the university is not planning a mass disenrollment, but he quoted university president Warren Baker as saying Cal Poly cares enough to expect the best out of its students. "We would be irresponsible not to give students the math base they will need in our high technology society," he said.

Wilson said the system is not intended to be punitive in any way, but the requirement must be met.

The list has been distributed to departments on campus, and some departments have given the list to faculty advisors in an attempt to reach students.

DeKleine said they are waiting for the results of the Oct. 19 tests to come back. At that time all the lists will be updated and a decision made on how serious the situation is becoming.

went with Carmack to identify the moose head. "There's hair missing, but we're glad to have it back."

It will be a while until the exhibit is hung up again in the museum. "There was damage done to the hook; until that's fixed the exhibit won't hang — it'll fall down," said Roest.

The museum is still cautious about leaving the museum open and will continue to curtail its hours, said Roest.

"We're very grateful to get (the moose head) back. I'm sorry it was damaged through its escapades," said Roest. "But I'm very glad to have it returned."

Roest said he is checking former descriptions of the moose head because he believes one of the antler points was broken off.

Families of hostages less critical of Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Relatives of the U.S. hostages being held in Lebanon softened their criticism of President Reagan following a two-hour White House meeting, saying they were told of new initiatives being taken to win the hostages' release.

Reagan met privately Monday with family members of four of the six captive Americans and convinced them of his on-going efforts to bring the hostages home, even though no breakthroughs appear imminent, participants said.

It was the first time the president invited family members of the hostages to the White House since the kidnappings began in early 1984. The family members were here on a three-day lobbying blitz, and some members planned to meet Tuesday with members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Sue Franceschini, whose brother the Rev. Lawrence Jenco is among the hostages, said Reagan and his national security adviser, Robert McFarlane, told the families new initiatives were being taken to obtain the captives' freedom.
